

Interview Questions

Before you start decide whether you want to interview your hero or your villain. It's a good idea to plan some questions and answers to give your interview a structure.

Remember your question words: Who, what, where, when, and why?

Fill in your questions and answers in the boxes, we've started you off with the first one.

Whats your name?

Sammy the Salmon

What happened?

Poly bag came out of nowhere and I got wrapped up inside her.

Was it scary?

Yeh if I hadn't been so big I might not have made it, I've seen fish got like that before! It's scary stuff for sure!

Could it have been prevented?

No offence to Poly. But she shouldn't have been there at all! or anywhere for that matter. Ditch the disposables I say!

When you're done try role playing your interview with a friend.

Interview Questions

Before you start decide whether you want to interview your hero or your villain. It's a good idea to plan some questions and answers to give your interview a structure.

Remember your question words: Who, what, where, when, and why?

Fill in your questions and answers in the boxes, we've started you off with the first one.

Whats your name?

| |
|------------------|
| Whats your name? |
| |

| |
|--|
| |
| |

| |
|--|
| |
| |

| |
|--|
| |
| |

When you're done try role playing your interview with a friend.

Storyboard

A movie storyboard looks a bit like a comic strip and is a good way to visualise your story before filming it. Write or draw in each box to plan your movie.

Title card

Beginning/Setup

Rising action

Rising action

Middle/Confrontation

Falling action

Falling action

End/Resolution

Credits

